

National radio, such as the K-LOVE and AirOne broadcasts, offer a quality of radio broadcast that is generally absent at the local level, such as the proposed Low Power FM (LPFM). While the national radio service can not provide me my local weather, they do provide the latest news, music and relevant commentary. Since KLOVE is non-commercial, I support them financially every month and have done so for years. I would not appreciate losing this radio network. Previously, I lived in regions with only local specialty stations. The limited music selection, due to financial concerns, along with inexperienced and frankly untalented hosts forced me to purchase music and turn off the radio. The current media environment has something for everyone. Please do not change it. It works!
